

McAuley Works – assisting women to find and keep employment

Are you working with a woman who is keen to start to look for work?

McAuley Works is an intensive employment program that assists women who have experienced family violence, homelessness or mental health issues to find and maintain employment.

We work with women to develop vital job ready skills, preparing for interviews and bolstering the confidence they need to secure jobs in the open and competitive market.

What McAuley Works offers

We run a free, personalised job ready program to help women secure jobs and support themselves and their family financially. This includes:

- Resume preparation
- Interview training and referrals for interviews
- Job seeking skills
- Obtaining work experience
- Post placement support.

A personalised program

Our service includes providing:

- Case work/management together with the woman's existing case worker to focus on setting, reviewing and achieving goals in relation to employment.
- Coaching and mentoring women to negotiate employment and mainstream services
- Offering advice and information, and linking a woman into her local employment service provider to increase access to vocational training and assistance.
- Once placed, we provide ongoing support to ensure the woman is able to retain the job.
- We can attend appointments and job interviews with women, supporting them in a way that traditional employment services are not resourced to provide.
